I hear long ago that the world was a Paradise,
Where beauty endured in each kind.
A foe entered in, and beheld man and woman there,
He said, "What you've heard is a lie,"
And led them away from the home that they knew
To learn of sorrow and dying.

Oh, where can I go? Where is beauty and holiness?
And how can I see when I'm blind?
And what words are these of a Cross, and a God of love,
A man, binding death for all time?
Oh, this is the One who arose from the grave
To turn His people from dying.
